WHEAT

Survey of the Wheat Situation
The Food Research Bureau of Stanford University sums up the current wheat situation as follows: "A substantial reduction of world stocks is probable during the current year but these stocks will not be reduced to normal. A very small international movement of wheat and flour is anticipated for the crop year, probably only 575 million bushels. British wheat prices (sold) for the next four months will probably advance moderately from the low level of early September but not more than a moderate advance is reasonably expected. Probably only further inflationary developments would cause Chicago futures, as quoted to advance. By early September wheat prices at leading futures markets in terms of gold had fallen almost to the level of early April, the net gain in quotations corresponding closely to the amount of depreciation of the dollar."

Trouble With Russia Over Wheat Agreement

Russia has kicked over the traces in regard to the wheat trade agreement and demanded the right to export 60 million bushels instead of 48. Representatives from Russia have been in conference with the supervising body with no agreement so far. It would appear that the Russian wheat crop this year, particularly in the regions adjacent to the Black Sea, is a very good one and already some 14 million bushels have been sold to Great Britain. Should Russia refuse to come to an agreement and commence a policy of dumping wheat in European markets such a course might cause a serious situation. Negotiations have been continued at the present time.

Alcohol From Grain Uneconomic

From time to time suggestions have been made that surplus grain in Canada might well be used for the production of industrial alcohol for motor fuel purposes. However, Professor J. W. Shipley of the University of Alberta, who has studied the matter, would be a doubtful testimony. Grain alcohol alone is not a satisfactory fuel for engines designed primarily for the use of gasoline, he reports.

Cutting Down Production on A Large Scale

The United States is making an extraordinary effort to cut down many lines to farm production in order to balance supply and demand more evenly and to raise farm prices. Henry Wallace, secretary for agriculture in the United States government, said in an address last August that unless world trade was restored 40 million acres must be taken out of cultivation in the United States. Besides the campaign to cut wheat acreage by bonusing farmers to make a reduction of 10 per cent in their sowing, the government is on foot to restrict other lines of farm production. Some six million acres are being purchased by the government to aid in increasing market prices. A volume of cotton equal to four million bales was plowed under and the cotton farmers compensated for the destruction effected to the extent of $110,000,000.

Challenge to Philosophy of Unlimited Competition

"The philosophy of unlimited competition contributes to the rapid development of a growing nation. Many who have appreciated it believe that it was well adapted to pioneer conditions. Now, however, the United States has attained a complex industrial structure and a specialized agriculture, problems of unbalanced production have become more acute, and a number of groups have found, particularly in periods of violent economic disturbances, that the unrestrained competition production are limited. Under these conditions the practicability of the philosophy of unlimited competition is challenged. The need for control of competition with administration by groups as in the period of the guilds in England. The trend towards this philosophy, although not readily distinguishable until the post-war period, is now unmistakable."—E. A. Hockley, associate professor agriculture, economics, University of California.

The Creditors' Faces Dedication

"Representative of the Wheat Pools told the MacMillan committee there will have to be a substantial advance in prices before there is a scaling down of debts before there can a bany hope of returning property in the west or a material improvement in Canadian conditions. They should have said 'advance in prices' or 'a scaling down of debts'.

"With that 'qualifying' provision, the presentation from the pools goes directly to the heart of the situation as it now stands. It is a choice of higher commodity prices or a wholesale default of debts, private and public. Unless prices move upward or debts downward until the balance is restored there is no alternative. Debtors must 'go' or creditors must 'go'."

"It has been faithful," he cried. But to whom? His mistress? His wife? Himself? How faithful could he answer? Could they? Could you?"
